Dear High School Families,

As previously announced, starting on June 1, we will no longer introduce new concepts and instead transition into a final two-week period of targeted support for students who need more time and help to complete their work or to master the concepts that were taught this year. We are making this transition because both our Portland Promise Equity goal and our Remote Learning Plan call for mitigating the widening of opportunity gaps that some of our students have faced during remote learning, due to lack of access to resources and support outside of school. So what does this mean for your child?

If your child has not yet met the graduation or other essential standards in their courses, they will be invited to attend our “Sun School” from June 1st through the 12th. Sun School students will continue to attend remote school as they have been doing, although the structure of their day may change to some degree. During these two weeks, your child’s teachers will focus on providing lessons and support in the areas where they need more time or help to reach the graduation or essential standards for a course. Teachers will have smaller groups of students to focus on and won’t be introducing new concepts, so your child will have the additional help needed to stay on track for on-time graduation. We believe that all learners can rise to high expectations and that different students need different amounts of time and support to get there. These two weeks are designed in recognition of these beliefs and should be viewed as an opportunity for your child to get some extra assistance in the areas where they could benefit from it.

If your child is meeting their course standards, they will transition to “optional learning”. We are developing a set of enrichment materials for each week. These are being designed to support your child in being ‘prepared’ and ‘empowered’ with a mixture of academic and college-and-career-readiness activities. These plans will be posted on the school websites by 8 a.m. on Monday, June 1, and on June 8. Students are not required to complete these activities and they may pick and choose based on their interests. However, for families who want (or need) their child to continue with a structure for the day for these two weeks, this will provide that to you and them. Schools will continue to encourage participation in community building rituals throughout the week. More details on those opportunities and expectations will be coming out from your school as a follow-up to this letter.

If your child is participating in a district special education program (e.g. FLS, Breathe), they will continue as usual for the first two weeks of June. If your child has an IEP but is not in a specially designed program, you will hear from the school about whether or not they'll be invited to Sun School if they need more time to work on their IEP goals and graduation or essential course standards. If your child receives ELL services, your school will inform you about whether or not they will continue to work on their language goals and course standards during this time.

We appreciate that this transition is new and different. We care deeply about each and every child in our schools and recognize that they all have very different needs depending on who they are, what resources they have, and what they've experienced. Our efforts on Wednesdays and during these last two weeks of school are designed to respond to these really different needs across our community of learners.

Thank you for all that you are doing during this very challenging time. We recognize that the remote learning model has put a heavy burden on you. As we develop plans for the new school year, please know that we are reflecting deeply on what has worked well and what hasn't worked as well during this spring trimester to help inform what we do in the fall.

Sincerely,
